1. INTRODUCTION

The main purpose of completing this internship was to practise English teaching in a real school environment and understand how classroom teaching works. As an English Language Teaching student, I wanted to experience teaching students face to face, explain different concepts in simple words, and learn classroom management. I selected Decent Public Higher Secondary School in Turkish Colony, Makli, Thatta because I had studied my First Year and Intermediate (Classes XI and XII) at this school. Since I was familiar with the school and its environment, it was comfortable to complete my internship there.

Before starting the internship, I expected to improve my teaching skills, especially in English literature and grammar. I also wanted to learn how to manage different classes, prepare lessons, check students' copybooks, assess their learning, and take part in school activities. I worked with Classes IX-A, IX-B, X, XI, and Intermediate. This experience showed me that teaching also requires planning, communication, responsibility, and cooperation.

2. ORGANIZATION PROFILE

Decent Public Higher Secondary School is situated in Turkish Colony, Makli, Thatta. The school provides education from the primary to the higher secondary level. Its organization includes the Principal, Vice-Principal, section heads, subject teachers, office staff, and student monitors. The school holds morning assemblies, staff meetings, examinations, and Parent-Teacher Meetings.

I completed my internship in the English Department under the supervision of Sir Ali Sher Memon and with the support of my host teacher. The school has different sections, including Class IX-A, Class IX-B, Class X, Class XI, and Intermediate. Although I knew the school as a former student, returning as a student teacher gave me new responsibilities.

3. JOB DESCRIPTION AND TASKS PERFORMED

During my internship, I generally arrived at school at 7:50 AM and attended the morning assembly, which usually continued until 8:15 AM. After the assembly, I went to my assigned classes and taught topics according to the syllabus. My teaching responsibilities included English literature, grammar, reading, and writing activities.

In the Intermediate class, I taught resume writing, the story “Icarus and Daedalus”, and the poem “The Seven Ages of Man”. I also taught exercises related to the poem by keeping the book aside and explaining its main ideas in my own words. For Class XI (First Year), I taught the poem “Do Not Quit”, its exercises, and pronoun-antecedent agreement. In Class X (Matric), I taught tenses, present continuous tense, past perfect tense, active and passive voice, and summaries of the poems “Little Things” and “The Man Who Wins”. I also gave students an opportunity to present their poem summaries in front of the class.

For Classes IX-A and IX-B, I taught compare-and-contrast essay writing, active and passive voice, and related written exercises. I also introduced different types of reading and reading strategies to Class IX-B. I explained topics in simple language instead of depending only on the textbook. I involved students in board work, group writing, presentations, and practical exercises.

Apart from regular teaching, I checked students' copybooks and identified common mistakes in their written work. I also took extra periods whenever a teacher was absent so that students could continue their learning. On 15 October, for example, I took an extra period and continued teaching the assigned topics. I regularly discussed my progress, students' understanding, and the next day's tasks with my host teacher and supervisor.

I also participated in staff meetings and other school responsibilities. In the first Saturday meeting on 19 September, teachers discussed classroom settings, students, teaching methods, lesson plans, and syllabus changes. In the second meeting on 26 September, we discussed monthly progress and the preparation of examination papers. In the meeting on 3 October, feedback was collected about students' learning progress, and we started checking the monthly papers after the meeting. On 10 October, teachers prepared the school for the upcoming Parent-Teacher Meeting.

I also stayed for two extra hours on a Friday after the school ended early at 12:00 PM. Because my handwriting was good, I was asked to decorate notice boards and displays. On 17 October, the final day of my internship, I helped manage the Parent-Teacher Meeting, which lasted six hours. I coordinated with student prefects and monitors to welcome parents and support the school administration. According to my internship log, I completed 15 working days and recorded a total of 82 hours.

4. LEARNING OUTCOMES AND SKILLS

This internship helped me develop many practical teaching and professional skills. First, I learned that students understand concepts better when teachers explain them in simple and clear words. Reading directly from a textbook is not always enough. A teacher needs to explain the main idea, provide examples, and involve students in activities.

I also learned the importance of lesson planning and time management. Teaching different classes in one day requires preparation because every class has different learning needs. I understood that board work, group writing, presentations, and written exercises can make lessons more effective. These activities allow students to practise what they learn.

Checking copybooks and monthly examination papers improved my ability to identify students' common mistakes and understand their learning progress. Staff meetings taught me how teachers cooperate, share feedback, discuss syllabus coverage, and prepare examination papers. Preparing notice boards and participating in the Parent-Teacher Meeting also helped me develop teamwork, communication, coordination, and organizational skills.

Feedback from my supervisor, host teacher, and students helped me reflect on my teaching and identify areas for improvement. Overall, I became more confident in explaining lessons, managing classes, and completing school responsibilities.

5. CHALLENGES FACED AND SOLUTIONS

I faced a few challenges during my internship. One of the main challenges was punctuality. The school was approximately 30 to 40 kilometres away from my home, and I travelled this distance on my bike every morning. Reaching school at 7:50 AM was sometimes difficult because of the long journey. However, I managed this responsibility through discipline and proper planning.

Another memorable challenge occurred on my first day in the Intermediate class. When I was a student, our class periods were only 25 minutes long. Therefore, I prepared my resume-writing lesson for 25 minutes because I usually prefer concise teaching and can explain a topic in around 20 minutes. However, when I entered the classroom, I asked students about the period duration and learned that it was 45 minutes. I felt nervous because I had not prepared enough material for that duration. Surprisingly, once I started explaining the topic, time passed quickly. I only completed the introduction, and the period was already over. This experience increased my confidence and taught me that classroom teaching can be different from what we expect.

I managed copy checking, paper checking, different classes, and extra duties by preparing in advance and organizing my work.

6. CONCLUSION

In conclusion, my internship at Decent Public Higher Secondary School, Turkish Colony, Makli, Thatta, was a valuable learning experience. Returning to my former school as a student teacher gave me an opportunity to see the educational environment from a different perspective. I practised teaching English literature and grammar, prepared lessons, guided students in written activities, checked copybooks, and participated in staff meetings and school events.

The experience taught me that a good teacher needs subject knowledge, clear communication, proper planning, patience, and the ability to understand students' needs. I also learned that school responsibilities go beyond classroom teaching and require teamwork and cooperation. This internship improved my confidence and helped me understand the practical responsibilities of an English teacher. I will use these skills and experiences in my future teaching career.
